Twenty-Five Years of LIBS Field Trips

Margaret Conover, Editor

This special anniversary issue of the LIBS newsletter is a record of all the botanical field trips and workshops conducted by the society over its 25-year history.

From the beginning, LIBS has had an active program of field trips. Two hundred and thirty trips have been offered to date, averaging nearly 10 trips a year. These were not simply nature walks, but rather field experiences with a purpose. We willingly wandered off the beaten path to cover seldom-visited and sometimes difficult terrain, and we often discovered new populations of plants or rediscovered historically known occurrences. We usually documented our plant sightings with photographs and species inventories. We also had lots of fun and adventures. But although field trip results were sometimes reported in the minutes of monthly meetings, no complete record of LIBS field trips has ever been compiled.

So, with Eric Lamont's encouragement and a great deal of help from Skip and Jane Blanchard, I've spent the past several months reconstructing our field trip history in the form of a detailed database showing dates, locations, leaders, highlights, and more. My sources were back issues of the LIBS newsletter, and some meeting minutes and personal field trip notes and records. This database is about 20 pages long and may be accessed from the LIBS website, www.libotanical.org.

This newsletter article is a condensed and illustrated version of the field trip database. Trips are listed in the order in which they occurred, and include the following information: the name of the site, the town or village in which it is located, the county (S for Suffolk, N for Nassau, others spelled out) and the trip leader(s). For some trips I've included cross-references to accompanying illustrations or footnoted recollections of participants.

This newsletter is illustrated with photographs of field-trip participants along with assorted plant finds. Over the years, Barbara Conolly attended and photographed 127 LIBS field trips. Last fall, she loaned us her collection of photo albums

(Fig. 1), Eric Lamont selected some 150 photos, and I scanned the images and composed the collages. Some of the collage photos, as published here, are very small. However, readers who want a better look may be satisfied by enlarging the newsletter pdf found on the LIBS website.

The success of LIBS' field program is entirely thanks to the service of those volunteers who contributed their time and talent. Eight people chaired the LIBS Field Trip Committee over the years: Al Lindberg (our first official Field Trip Chair), Glenn Richard, Tom Meoli, Jenny Ulsheimer, Skip Blanchard, Dave Laby, James Mickley, and Mike Feder. I'm grateful to have had their help in preparing this newsletter.

Among our many talented and knowledgeable field trip leaders, seven stand out: Andy Greller (who led or co-led 24 trips), Eric Lamont (19), Skip Blanchard (18), Al Lindberg (15), Joe Beitel (15), Bob Zaremba (12), and Jenny Ulsheimer (11). Others who led five or more field trips include Tom Meoli, Chris Mangels, Ray Welch, Patrick Cooney, John Turner, and David Künstler.

It should be noted that LIBS frequently partnered with other organizations to sponsor field trips. In particular, 29 of our trips were co-sponsored by The Torrey Botanical Society. In addition to the trips formally scheduled by the Field Trip Committee, the LIBS newsletter often carried notices of trips organized on Long Island by other organizations such as the New York Flora Association, the Northeastern Section of the Botanical Society of America, and the Niagara Frontier Botanical Society. Since LIBS members were welcome participants on these trips, we have included them in the database as well.

In reality, the database is still a work-in-progress, and we need your help to improve it. If you are aware of inaccuracies, either in the photo collages or in the list of trips, please let us know so that we can revise the database and publish corrections. Readers are also urged to contribute photos, anecdotes and plant lists from trips they have attended. We have collected 30 plant lists to date and will link these to the website in the near future.

UPCOMING PROGRAMS

January and February: No meeting!

March 13, 2012***

Tuesday, 7:30 PM

Eric Morgan: "Ecology of a Southwest New England Forest and its Invasion by a Non Native Tree Species."

Learn about a statistical analysis of the invasion of the Amur Cork Tree, Phellodendron amurense throughout the eastern United States. This tree has been noted as a particular problem right here in Forest Park, Queens. Eric is on staff at the Bartlett Arboretum and Gardens in Stamford, CT. A major aspect of his work is the acquisition and maintenance of the Arboretum's living collections, including the display beds, trees and shrubs, and an expanding selection of tropical plants which are added each year. He is also curator of the herbarium and research departments, and has published on tropical biology topics regarding Florida and Peru.

Location: Bill Paterson Nature Center, Muttontown Preserve, East Norwich

April 10, 2012***

Tuesday, 7:30 PM

Jennifer Dean: "Tracking Invasive Species in New York with Volunteers and Professionals."

Invasive species are a major threat to biodiversity, particularly at localized scales. In New York, the State invasive species database (iMapInvasives) was developed to provide an online mapping tool for aggregating and sharing invasive species data. Since 2010, the NY Natural Heritage Program has been training users to enter data into iMapInvasives to gain a better understanding of infestations and to help with the early detection and rapid response of new invaders. Jennifer earned her Ph.D. from Penn State University in Entomology with a focus on plant-insect interactions, and a B.S. in Plant Biology from Ohio University. She is the Invasive Species Biologist for the New York Natural Heritage Program, where she provides biological expertise for the database, conducts state-wide outreach, and collaborates with other groups throughout the state that are concerned with—and track—invasive species.

Location: Museum of Long Island Natural Sciences, Earth and Space Science Building, Gil Hanson Room (Room 123), Stony Brook University, Stony Brook

\ Refreshments and informal talk begin at 7:30 p.m.*

Formal meeting starts at 8:00 p.m.

Directions to Muttontown or Stony Brook: 516-354-6506

LIBS Field Trips 1986-1989

LIBS set a high standard in the first 4 years, thanks especially to Bob Zaremba and Joe Beitel, who led 17 of the 40 field trips and arranged for many others. Identification workshops on ferns, grasses, Juncus and Luzula were held. Field trips were scheduled in all seasons.

<sup>1</sup> I may well have been the first official Field Trip Chair; before then I believe that the trips were ad lib or organized by the President. I volunteered to be Field Trip Chair when Lois took over as President from Vince Puglisi circa 1990. At the time the number of field trips had dwindled to a very few and Lois and I felt that to keep people interested we needed more trips so I took on the chairmanship. -- Al Lindberg

<sup>2</sup> And I do remember going to Hubbard Marsh with Bob Zaremba on a LIBS trip and finding a pretty little white flower blooming in the salt marsh at my feet. I waved to Bob but he insisted I come to him - he had the desirable little flowering plant. So I pulled up the flower and went. Turns out he just had leaves and I had the very rare flower in my hand. There was a silence in the group (Dick Mitchell was one of them) and I could have died of embarrassment! -- Barbara Conolly

<sup>1</sup> The one dramatic thing that keeps popping into my head was the day at Orient Point when Betty fell backwards into a Prickly Pear and we had a little extracting to do.—Barbara Conolly

<sup>2</sup> On a joint trip with the Torrey Botanical Society to the north part of Caleb Smith State Park led by Rich Kelly and me in May of 2004, we were able to find and point out a small, tentative leaf of the rare grape fern Botrychium oneidense—probably the same plant that Joe Beitel had shown a bunch of us on a cool, damp late-October day 18 years earlier. — Skip Blanchard

<sup>3</sup> And our 2004 trip was also blessed with club mosses. During the winter leading up to our trip, Rich and I had been checking out club mosses at various sites around Long Island. They were easily found then because they were among the few winter-green plants on the woodlands floor and they often formed good-sized clones. As a result, on our trip we were able to point out the uncommon shining club moss Hyperzia lucidula, as well as Lycopodium dendroideum, L. obscurum, Diphasiastrum digitatum, and the unusual hybrid D. Xhabererii (D. digitatum X tristachyum). — Skip Blanchard

<sup>4</sup> I also recollect a trip to the Calverton Ponds where afterwards Barbara Conolly and I reviewed our lists, commenting on some plants that we had missed, and then we realized that, even more to the point, we had spent the whole day without seeing a single invasive species! [Barbara later expressed this well in "Three Swans Sleeping," LIBS Newsletter 14(4): 36.] — Skip Blanchard

<sup>1</sup> I recall a trip to William Cullen Bryant Preserve where we accidentally stirred up a nest of yellow-jackets along the trail, and where later Zu Proly, still recovering from a recent hip replacement, nevertheless scrambled doggedly up the slope of a steep ravine along with the rest of us. And then I found a plant on that trip that I had never seen before--Cyperus squarrosus--in the cracks of the Preserve's parking lot pavement. -- Skip Blanchard

<sup>3</sup> The morning of the trip Hurricane David was poised to strike Long Island. A cold front came in and gently nudged the hurricane out to sea. So we got soaked by the rain from the cold front instead. The mosquitos were so bad that we ran to look at certain plants, looked for 5 seconds, and then literally ran away. -- Rich Kelly
